Wayne and Richard are the fourth generation of Olsons who are passing down the tradition of organic farming from their grandparents who emigrated from Sweden in 1889. The fifth generation is now learning these organic farming practices so that the tradition will continue into the future.

The Olsons are always looking for new varieties with better taste and quality to add to their 75 selected varieties of stone fruit. Their organic peaches, plums, nectarines and apricots can be found in stores across the nation from mid-May to September.

The Olson family finds pleasure in seeing the dove nesting among the blossoms, the quail and rabbits in the cover crop of clover and the freshness of each new day.

"It is an honor and a blessing to be caretakers of what God has entrusted to us," they say.
